ITALIAN ELECTION RETURNS

- I. Unofficial Ministry of Interior figures (30 May) show a total of 26½ million votes cast in the weekend communal elections. This is some 9½% of the electorate and compares with 24½ million votes in the last communal elections ('51-'52).
- A. In general, the extremes of left and right seem to have suffered, with significant gains going to the Renzi Socialists and the Democratic Socialists.
- B. Nationwide returns thusfar show votes only by major blocs, however, so that we are presently unable to assess these gains in detail. Percentages by blocs show:
- | | 1956 | 1951-52 | (1956 parliamentary) |
|--------|------|---------|----------------------|
| LEFT | 34.1 | 35 | (35.4) |
| CENTER | 33.4 | 36.7 | (42.6) |
| RIGHT | 11.2 | 12.2 | (12.8) |
| OTHER | 1.3 | 2.1 | (1.9) |
- II. The new election law (proportional representation in towns and cities over 10,000) has resulted in the Christian Democrats losing control over such major cities as Rome, Florence, Venice and Genoa. If the CD's are to resume control, they probably will have to organize new alliances with the Renzi Socialists or the extreme right in these cities.
- A. In this connection, Renzi in a 29 May post-election statement said: "The CP must now get down to brass tacks with us, and we with them".
